The View From Here

LIKE NAPA, Osoyoos has a diverse terroir and micro-climates. Here, you'll find wines of superlative quality from grower-producers like Nk'Mip Cellars, North America's first Indigenous-owned winery; small-lot Gold Hill Winery; and ambitious newcomer Phantom Creek Estates. The state-of-the-art vineyard is known for its exceptional biodynamic wines created by Napa Valley transplant and winemaker Mark Beringer. There's an amphitheatre (above) for outdoor concerts, grand art installations and, in the barrel-lined Founder's Cellar, a mesmerizing chandelier by glass sculptor Dale Chihuly. Composed of hundreds of pieces of mouth-blown glass in pale yellows and ambers, it glows like the valley's beneficent sun. —Renée Suen

CERTIFICATION // INDIGENOUS TOURISM

Authenticity is a phrase that's bandied about a lot these days, in fashion, food and travel. Often you just have to go on people's word that what they're offering is genuine. With the Original Original mark of excellence (below right), the Indigenous Tourism Association of Canada (ITAC) set out to make it easier for travellers to know that they're experiencing the real deal. In order to obtain the Original Original the business has to be majority owned, -operated and -controlled by First Nations,

Métis or Inuit Peoples and demonstrate a connection and responsibility to the local Indigenous community and territory. Hop onto destinationindigenous.ca to find incredible experiences across the country, from equine-assisted learning at Osawamick Ranch on Ontario's Manitoulin Island to glamping under the stars at Siwash Lake Wilderness Resort in Cariboo, B.C (right). Or simply look for the mark wherever you choose to wander this summer. —AW

CULTURE // ARTS INTEL REPORT

Want to know which play has Londoners buzzing, what exhibition to check out in New York or the top spots to eat in Sydney? There's a new handy, and most importantly, trustworthy, guide - brought to you by the clever folks at Air Mail (a digital weekly newsletter and website led by former Vanity Fair co-editor Graydon Carter) - called the Arts Intel Report. It was created, in their words, as the searchable international cultural guidebook built "by people and for people who don't trust guidebooks." The editors select essential events to highlight around the world, from ballets to rock concerts, art shows to nightclub acts. On top of which there's also a nifty search function where you can type in a popular city, arts discipline and date for specific recommendations to help you plan the perfect cultural sortie. airmail.news/arts-intel —AW

BUSINESS OF TRAVEL // FLIGHT PASSES

"All you can fly" sounds like music to our ears, and flight passes could be the ticket for those who frequently travel to the same destination and want to avoid fluctuating prices. With the Air Canada Flight Pass, travellers purchase a set number of one-way-flight credits - or an unlimited travel package - within a set geographic zone, at a fixed price. (For example, a 10-pack of Flex tickets for travel within Ontario is $3,900.) They can book flights, with few restrictions - right up till one hour before departure. While it's an obvious benefit to business travellers, these passes also work for homesick university students, spontaneous vacationers or anyone tired of exorbitant last-minute fares. Porter offers a similar pass, and it comes with an enticing benefit. If you buy one of the airline's larger packages of 20, 50 or 100 prepaid flights, the credits are transferable - perfect for families or groups of people who want to share the hefty expense. (20 standard tickets from Toronto to New York cost nearly $5,000, or $250 a flight.) —Barry Choi

■ MAPPED INTEL: To save a few bucks, pick up a $500 Porter gift card at Costco for just $450 and use it toward a pass.
